In social psychology, a stereotype is an over-generalized belief about a particular category of people. Stereotypes are generalized because one assumes that the stereotype is true for each individual person in the category. While such generalizations may be useful when making quick decisions, they may be erroneous when applied to particular individuals.

Correlations don't imply causality. Completely ignore the question of whether Facebook works (assume we are taking about Ren Ren or Google+). Focus on the fact that this was the launch of a powerful new new product via a continent-wide rebranding campaign using massive online and offline media buys.

Thinking Outside the Box: A Misguided Idea | Psychology Today

Thinking outside the box is a common phrase used to describe creative thinking. However, research shows that thinking outside the box is often a result of a specific context or environment. In many cases, the "box" is not a physical object but a mental barrier. For example, a person might be encouraged to think outside the box when they are faced with a complex problem. In this case, the "box" is the person's preconceived notions about the problem. By thinking outside the box, the person is able to see the problem from a new perspective and come up with a creative solution.
